We are fortunate to live in one of the World's healthiest societies, yet men of all backgrounds have less chance of living healthy lives: we die younger; experience more disease and have less access to support services. Research shows that the best way to improve men's health is to tackle the underlying social factors like boys' education; our experiences of fatherhood; our working lives; our social connections and our access to male-friendly services. AMHF is at the centre of a diverse network of individuals and organisations working together to tackle the social factors that shape men and boys' health. We want to create a healthier future for men and boys' by tackling the male health crisis and getting the world working for men and boys.
